This is a class diagram example that shows how company entities can be modeled.

A company consists of departments. Departments are located in one or more offices. One office acts as a headquarter. Each department has a manager who is recruited from the set of employees. Your task is to model the system for the company.